INTRODUCTION

Child Abuse Prevention Education: An Annotated Resource Guide

This guide is intended as a primary resource for educators, parents and other professionals who actively share a concern about child abuse prevention. All users of this guide are encouraged to forward their comments on any information presented and to suggest further resources for inclusion in the next edition.

Printed and audiovisual materials are included if they focus on prevention of child abuse and were published within the last ten years. Exceptions are made in a few cases where the resource serves an historical purpose or is considered to be a classic in this area of education. The annotations include information that reflects any limiting factors such as suitability for a specific age range, ethnic group, or geographic locale.

Inclusion of materials in this guide does not imply endorsement by the Ministry of Education. It is recommended that all materials be carefully screened prior to inclusion in any educational program or treatment procedure.

Resource materials and personnel are listed separately for regular and special education programs. However the lists of distributors and publishers refer to resources in both sections.

Child abuse prevention contact personnel in British Columbia school districts were selected with the assistance of the superintendents. These contacts will become part of a province-wide network in liaising with the Ministry of Education and in disseminating information within each district. In most instances, the contacts have expertise in regular education and not necessarily in special education.
